Finale .....God save the Queen.

THE steamer Yang-tsze will be despatched at day-light on Tuesday, the 19th inst.

THE mail steamer from Hongkong with Post-office packets is not arrived at the hour we go to press.

THE Imperial Commissioners, with the Governor and other Officers of State, are, whilst we are writing, paying a visit to H. E. The Earl of Elgin and Kincardine, at the British Consulate.

THE COMMISSIONERS.

WE are disappointed in our hopes of being able to give some account of the progress of negotiations; for we presume negotiations are in progress, although notwithstanding numerous declarations to the contrary the Commissioners and Lord Elgin have not yet met. Mr. Oliphant, the present Acting Secretary of Embassy, and Mr. Wade have been closeted with the Treasurer and the Taoutae nearly all the week. Their business is believed to be proceeding satisfactorily.

We understand that so far from any desire having been manifested by the Commissioners to recede from the Treaty stipulations agreed to at Tien-tsin they have shown themselves most anxious to meet the views of the Plenipotentiary, and have given evidence of this spirit in the readiness with which they posted up the proclamation announcing the establishment of peaceful relations and the termination of existing difficulties throughout the empire, a copy of which will be found in our columns.

It appears that the Commissioners purpose forwarding a copy of this Proclamation to the Governor-General Hwang by a special messenger in the next steamer. It is a step in the right direction that they should have learnt to avail themselves of this more speedy mode of communication. There can be little doubt that the receipt of this document under the seal of such high functionaries as those now at Shanghai will strike the last blow at the war policy hitherto affected by Hwang. It is only to be regretted that the General Commanding at Canton should not have availed himself of the opportunities afforded him of bringing the Governor-General to his senses instead of leaving it to the Imperial Commissioners.

It is further reported that the Emperor has been already moved by the Commissioners to remove Hwang from his present position for the mismanagement he has shown in affairs in the South, and that they have pledged themselves to the withdrawal of their special powers from the Fayune War Committee, the continuance of which has been regarded as a standing menace to our Army of Occupation.

The stay of the Commissioners here will, we fear, be impressed on their recollection by a most disagreable incident. Two foreigners are said to have presented themselves at the gate of the building in which the mandarins are residing, and to have insisted on admission. This was of course refused them, and in retaliation they, (or one of them,) smashed the lamps hanging under the gate-way, if they did not assault the Chinese who opposed their entry. Of course the whole thing might be a fiction, or the offending parties may have been sailors in the condition sailors have the misfortune too often to be; we should be glad to discredit the story altogether; but it continues to be repeated, and indeed the name of one delinquent is tacked to it. We are sure that we but declare the general feeling of the foreign community when we express an opinion that an act of violence so wanton, and at this moment so particularly to have been avoided, is not less worthy of reprobation than regret. Imagine an unauthorised stranger, no matter what his nationality, presenting himself at our Ambassador's door, or at any one's door in the place, and breaking the coolies' heads or lanterns because he was given to understand that he could not come in unannounced; should we find words strong enough for his case, or imagine him sufficiently punished by the penalty which the law would enable his Consul to inflict? and what impression will these officers of unusually high rank carry back to the Emperor of the people to whom they had just got him to concede the privilege of overrunning his dominions? If such things can happen, must they not argue, where there are foreign officers to govern these people, what will they not do when they are passporting it about the country miles away from consular jurisdiction? We understand that they talked of moving off at once to Sûng-keang-foo, or some place a little less within reach of foreign civilisation. We cannot wonder at it, and in the interest of the foreign name in general, nothing would give us greater pleasure than to learn that our authorities had been able to announce to them the detection and punishment of the parties responsible for these outrages. Without great discrimination in the issue of passports we shall doubtless work up more peceable Chinese than the Cantonese to equal animosity with theirs, and we sincerely trust that before the Treaty comes into play, the Passport system will be placed by common consent of the powers concerned, under most stringent regulations.

IN another column will be found a letter under the signature of "Fairplay" directed to that portion of our article of last week on the subject of our new Trade Regulations, which refers to the necessity of endeavouring to establish some Jurisdiction which may comprise under its control the subject of non-Treaty Powers.

Holding ourselves responsible to the public for all that appears in our Editorial articles, as in the other portions of our paper, we reserve to ourselves the right, in common with all Journalists, and in the interests of free discussion, to refuse to allow those from whom we may accept or invite contributions upon topics of public interest to appear in our Editorial columns under individual designations. For want of a better, Fairplay, must needs accept, therefore, our own humble responsibility for the remarks which have given so much offence to his national sensibilities. We think that it may be freely left to the public to decide whether any fair or candid construction of our remarks, will justify the imputation of Fairplay that they were intended to offer an insult to the subjects of the German States or of any other Powers, as such. We are glad nevertheless to have the opportunity of bearing testimony to the deserved esteem in which, as a class, the natives of Germany, whether of the mercantile body or the mercantile marine, are held among us, and we should calculate with confidence on their support for any scheme fairly and honestly directed to secure the equal administration to all Foreigners alike, of some recognised code or combination of codes of Western Law. It is, by comparison, very immaterial what code is adopted. It is all important that some code should be put into effective operation. As Englishmen we should prefer to be amenable only to English law, but to the extent of our reciprocal responsibilities with non-Treaty subjects, and those of the non-Treaty subjects to the Chinese in the exercise of the privileges for which the former are indebted to the Treaty Powers, we say, what law you will, that of England, of France, of the United States, but let us no longer be lawless.

Though after the best consideration which we have been able to give to his remarks we cannot compliment Fairplay upon having shed much light upon a confessedly difficult subject, we should have esteemed it a mark of good fortune to have been enabled to offer through our columns for the consideration of those in whose hands the question now rests, any suggestions beyond those we have made, calculated to indicate the mode in which the desired object may be best attained. Both the difficulty and the mode of attempting a remedy are well stated in a recent pamphlet entitled "our Policy in China," the production evidently of an able and experienced writer intimately acquainted with the subject. Advocating a large modification of the policy of exclusion so long practised towards Foreigners by this people he writes,—

"In this view it must, I think, be apparent that there is a contingent condition to final success which cannot be dispensed with; and so thoroughly am I persuaded of the truth of this, that I should deem the policy we are now considering, altogether inadmissible and inapplicable to the actual state of China,—if that condition should be wanting. I refer to the necessity of devising some system of efficient control over all foreigners, whatever their nationality, who claim the benefits and privileges only to be secured by maintaining treaty relations with China. Exemption from territorial jurisdiction must still be, as it always has been in modern times, the rule, where western nations come in contact with an eastern race acknowledging no common principles of international law or jurisprudence;—and where the administration of justice is notoriously untrustworthy, in regard to foreigners especially. Nevertheless if the sovereign of China waives his territorial rights in this respect; he only transfers the obligation in its most binding form upon those States who claim for their subjects this exemption—an obligation, I am sorry to say, in no case very clearly recognized by Western powers; and in many instances notoriously and shamefully neglected, to the great prejudice of all—of China first, and of all European powers having interests at stake, next. A remedy must be found for this, for it is a great and crying evil. It stands, with religious and political propagandism, at the threshold of all negotiation for enlarged facilities of intercourse and access; and provision for its certain removal, must form the first step, as it certainly is the first duty of the negotiators for States, boasting of civilization and Christianity. How this may best be effected is indeed a serious question; and one it will tax the best powers of those on whom the duty devolves—to answer satisfactorily.

"Whatever may be the difficulty of devising some system of efficient control over all foreigners, who may be found at any time within the Chinese dominions;—the necessity is great, and success is of vital moment. It is the first preliminary condition of the much-desired access to first markets and producing districts in the interior, or greater freedom of intercourse with the coast. Nor would the difficulty be so great, if all the treaty powers could be brought in accord, even on this one subject alone:—and some concerted action and general agreement between England, France, and America at least, is indispensable. Where all have the same, if not an equal degree of interest, in the results, there should be no insuperable obstacle."

We take opportunity in this place to do justice to the able services rendered in the establishing of an equal and fair collection of Customs duties at this port in the outset of the Foreign Inspectorship, by Mr. Wade, the present Chinese Secretary, then Vice-Consul at Shanghai, and which we erroneously omitted to recognise in our article of last week. It was to his administration in the outset that we owe the organisation since so efficiently conducted by his successor Mr. Lay, who had been before associated with Mr. Wade in the British Consular service. Both these gentlemen possessed excellent capabities for insuring practical if not popular success to the experiment of a Foreign Inspectorship, but if we are to be called upon by the extention of that system to all the ports of Foreign trade to find not two only, but ten or twenty men equal to the like undertaking there are few acquainted with the subject but will doubt the practicability of accomplishing this, either at the present or any early period.

THE private steamer Yangtsze, on Friday the 15th brought us a portion of the London mail of 25th of August, as usual in advance of the Mail Steamer.

The dates are, London, vid Marseilles, 25th August,—Bombay, Sept. 15th,—Galle, 20th,—Singapore, 30th,—and Hongkong, 9th inst.

The mail arrived in Hongkong per Singapore on the 18th inst. Her news was brought on per Fiery Cross from Singapore, and received in Hongkong the day before.

PASSENGERS.—R. Hayne, R.N., Messrs. Johnson, Webb, Woolidge, Soy, Assistant Com: Gen: Rogers, Assistant Surgeon, Pain, and Mrs. Pain.

The Atlantic telegraph continued to work as well as could be expected, the "talking" apparatus was not completed, and messages and replies occupied several hours, in transmission, until that was brought to perfection.

The arrival of an announcement, by electric telegraph vid St. Petersburgh and Paris, that the Treaties had been signed at Teen-tsin on the 20th June caused considerable excitement, and some wonder that the news should reach England first by that route. It was received in London on the 20th, having been dispatched from Teen-tsin on the 27th making 54 days. A dispatch steamer to Suez could have communicated the news in 42 days and post office packets might have arrived in less than 48. But no express having been sent on our part, the dispatches by regular course of mail would not arrive in London until the 13th of Sept.

The money market remained without change.

The minimum rate of discount at the Bank of England was still 3 per cent. In the open market paper of the highest class could be done at 2½ to 2¾ though 2¾ was the current rate.

THE Hongkong Government Gazette of 25th Sept. contains a translation of an Official Notice of the Blockade of the Bay and River of Turon, and the Port of Chang Callao by the French and Spanish forces of which the following is a copy:—

(Translation.)

I, the undersigned, Rear-Admiral Commander-in-Chief of the French and Spanish Forces, charged with the demand of reparation due for the wrongs done to the Governments of France and Spain, and in virtue of the powers belonging to me as Commander-in-Chief,

DECLARE:

That from the 1st of September, 1858, the Bay and the River of Turon, and the Port of Chang Callao, are held in a state of effective Blockade by the Naval and Military Forces placed under my command.

Any Ship which shall attempt to violate the Blockade, will be proceeded against according to International Laws, and the Treaties in vigor with Neutral Nations.

The Provisional Secretary of the French Legation in China.

THE following notice has been posted on the Custom-House Gates and within the city of Shanghai:—

The Imperial Commissioners

KWEI, a Chief Secretary of State, &c.,
HWA, President of the Board of Civil Office, &c., MING, a high officer of the 2nd grade belonging to the Imperial Household, and TWAN, a titulary president, and member of the Great Council,

issue this Notification:—

Be it known that there have been negotiated and established by the above Commissioners at Tien-tsing relations of amity to endure for evermore between China, and England, France, and America, and it is their duty, lest indeed the fact should not be universally known to the gentry, merchants, and population in general, to issue notification thereof.

They accordingly notify to the merchants and people of the different ports, that henceforth as the Commissioners earnestly hope, there is to be permanent and substantial friendship between our nations, both parties in common enjoying comfort and advantage. Attend to this! Let none disobey. A special proclamation.

IT was reported on Sunday by a Chinese that E-ching was in the possession of local bandits, and that upwards of a thousand troops were despatched from Shanghae in the steamers Confucius and Paoushun under the command of a military officer named Yu, for the assistance of the imperialists at the above city.

The city of Luh-ho is said to be surrounded and sorely pressed by local rioters. Troops are being got ready to proceed to the rescue.

The gates of Yang-chow are shut, to prevent the intrusion of spies from the rebels.

On the 10th, at 7 A.M. the Governor-general despatched a flying courier for the capital, with a memorial regarding the state of affairs north of the Yang-tsze-keang.

The imperial commissioners also despatched a flying courier with communications for the Emperor, and a letter for the prince Sang-ko-lin-sin, but the purport of it has not transpired.

The local mandarins have all been to pay their respects to the imperial commissioners. They are admitted to interviews on permission from the chief commissioner Kwei-liang.

The table expenses of the grand commissioners amount to 35,000 cash each daily; the secondary commissioners are allowed 8,000 cash each per diem.

The imperial commissioners have delegated to Hwang the mayor of Shanghae extra powers, with authority for the suppression of disorderly conduct among the official followers, military officers and retainers connected with the commission.

Shanghae, 11th October, 1858.

OUR Chinese correspondent assures us that a rumour that the Imperial Commissioners have left a large body of troops at Soochow has very much disquieted the native merchant community. Others attribute their alarm to the state of things up the river. Two steamers are said to have been sent with troops up Chin-kiang, some say they took pay for troops but no men; which, the size of the vessels considered, seems to us most likely. Sam-qua is stated to have daily confabulations with Kweiliang. By desire of the Treasurer Wang he investigated a case of inland tea smuggling last week, and he is now thought to have been instructed to do some service in Hwny-chow in the Canton province; at least he sent or is to send two letters by steamer thither. It is worth observing that Hwang Tsung-han is residing at Hwny-chow Foo.

U. S. S. Minnesota, Capt. Dupont, arrived on the 10th from Nagasaki with H. E. Mr. Reed, U. S. Commissioner.

A correspondent informs us that the Emperor of Japan died some few days after the American Treaty was signed. There were several reports as to the cause of his death; one that he ripped his belly, another that he was murdered, another that he died of Cholera. Being childless, before his death he adopted Foer-tsiqo, prince of Kii-sin, aged 16 years, as his child and successor.

The President of the Council of State' Hotta Bitsiu no-Kami, and one of the members named Mats Daira Iga no-Kami, are dismissed.

The cholera morbus had quitted Nagasaki but was ravaging Simenoséki, Osaka and Yeddo.

The Prince of Satsuma, one of the cleverest and most intelligent Japanese died last month of this disease.

The Minnesota left Nagasaki on Thursday the 7th inst. at 7 A.M., arrived off the Saddles on Friday night and at Woosung on Saturday afternoon.

The U. S. S. Powhatan was at Nagasaki and is expected here shorthly.

To the Editor of the

NORTH-CHINA HERALD.

SIR,—I was much surprised to see in your issue of last week under that part of Article, the New Trade Regulations, headed "Consular Jurisdiction over Non-Treaty Subjects" the most abusive language used against Non-Treaty Subjects, and that in such a manner as to leave no doubt but that it is mostly if not entirely aimed at the Germans, because Portuguese and Spanish subjects can be controlled by their Consuls who have the power to send them to Macao and Manila for punishment, and the control all Consuls, whether Treaty or Commercial, have over their sailors is about equally strong. Although the Article appears as an Editorial I have no doubt but that some of your readers will guess the true writer and consider it particularly bad grace in him to cast such an unjust odium upon the German nation en masse.

Had the author had more experience he would have known that every nation has Black sheep, and had he reflected a little before writing as he did, he would perhaps have asked himself:—

1st. Who took such disgraceful part in the Nankin, Canton, and Shanghae rebellions since 1853?

2d. Who supplied the rebels with ammunition, &c.?

3d. Who bought the stolen goods from the Shanghae rebels?

4th. Who acted so disgracefully not many nights ago to an inexperienced Portuguese in North Gate Street?

5th. By whose failures were the Chinese so shamefully taken in?

To these and other questions of the same nature he would have had the mortifying reply: By Treaty Subjects! and chiefly by those of Great Britain and America!

And had he enquired—Do the Chinese prefer German or Treaty Vessels?

Do the Chinese like and trust German Houses?

The answer would have been:—That the Chinese prefer German to treaty vessels, because the Captains treat them less roughly than many Captains of other nations, and considering the small business done here, in Goods and Produce, by Germans as compared with Treaty Nations; the confidence shown by Chinese to Germans, is second to none shown to other nations.

I have also to remark that it has been tried by a party to place himself under the jurisdiction and protection of a Treaty Consul, which the Consul applied to, accepted, but which engagement the succeeding Consul repudiated. A Joint Tribunal of the Treaty Powers I fear would never answer; one of the many difficulties to make it work would be the difference between the Laws of the different Treaty nations. A plan that appears more feasible would be:

Let the different Treaty nations instruct their representatives in China to admit Non-Treaty subjects to their jurisdiction and protection on condition of the Non-Treaty subject signing a declaration to hold himself, while in China, amenable to the Jurisdiction of the Nation whose protection he accepts. There would then perhaps be none here who would not place himself under a Treaty Consul, as their own sense of honor, and the advantages arising from being under a Treaty Consul, would readily make them adopt this mode; but such can only be done if the different Treaty Powers make it imperative upon their representatives to accept Non-Treaty subjects, so that the Consuls have no choice in the matter; if it was left to the option of the Consuls to give or refuse at their pleasure their jurisdiction and protection to Non-Treaty subjects, probably no Foreigner would be found to place himself under their control, considering that Great Britain and the United States have at times been represented by men totally unfit for such positions and which men were anything but the ornaments and pride of their nations.

I beg that you will insert this Letter in your next Paper, and am Sir, your obedient servant,

FAIRPLAY.

An historical error in our notice of the establishment of foreign inspectors at this port has been brought to our recollection by a letter which speaks for itself. It has been corrected in another column and we hope Mr. Wade was never chargeable with anything worse.

SHANGHAE, 13th Oct. 1858.

To the Editor of the

NORTH-CHINA HERALD.

SIR,—Alluding to your remarks about the Inspectors of Customs you was not here when the thing was first set up, or you would have known that it did not begin with Mr. Lay's idea at all but I expect with Mr. Alcock or his Vice-Consul Mr. Wade who was the first inspector put in and quite as bad I mean not a bit milder than Mr. Lay as I can show you, for getting the brig ashore on the north bank and my foundation applied to have the cargo sent up in boats which is done always in case of distress and it all paid duty every piece and when the brig was got off which my owner gave me every cent it for doing and come into port with no cargo on board, Mr. Wade made me pay tonnage duty and tonnage on it though I told him I was not the party interested out my owners, which he replied that made no difference—and my Consul not standing by me neither of course I had to pay, and consider it a hardship which I always have and always shall I could not help bringing to mind the facts and the party, being which I am still—

ONE WHO WAS THERE.

THE case of the Margaret Mitchell possesses a peculiar interest for the residents of Shanghai, who remember some of the circumstances attending it, we have therefore copied, in extenso from the Shipping and Mercantile Gazette the decision of Dr. Lushington in this matter, given in the Admiralty Court on 5th of August last, which will be found below.

ADMIRALTY COURT.—Aug. 5.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.]

(Before Dr. Lushington.)

THE "MARGARET MITCHELL."—POSSESSION.

Dr. Lushington delivered judgment in the above case, the facts of which were reported in the Shipping and Mercantile Gazette of the 29th ult. He said: The question to be decided is, who is entitled to this ship? In a case of possession the Court is empowered by the Statute to try the question of title. The claimants are—first, Mr. Richards, who contends that he is the Owner of the ship by purchase at Shanghae, and that his title has never been lawfully divested; secondly, Messrs Morice and Towne, who allege first that Mr. Richards had never any lawful title to this ship, and, secondly, that if he had his title has been lawfully divested and conveyed to them, Messrs. Morice and Towne, by the act of his duly authorised attorney; and thirdly, they say that, upon the assumption that Mr. Richards had no title, they have a conveyance from Mr. Mitchell, the former Owner, whereby all his right is vested in them, Messrs. Morice and Towne. It has been urged in argument, on behalf of Messrs. Morice and Towne, that they might, if they had thought fit, have relied upon the sale by the attorney of Mr. Richards, and not entered into the question whether Richards had a title or not; and, certainly, it is true that if the title of Richards, be it good or bad, was divested out of him lawfully by the act of his attorney, Messrs. Morice and Towne would have no occasion to put in issue the legality of Richards' title. But this is not the course which has been pursued on behalf of Morice and Towne in the pleadings, for in their pleadings in defence to the action of Mr. Richards they have most distinctly denied his title, and alleged that the sale to him was fraudulent, illegal, and void. Moreover, they have taken a title from Mr. Mitchell, which title was worth nothing except on the presumption that the sale to Richards was illegal and void, and they have registered the ship according to the Bill of Sale from Mitchell. Now, it is abundantly clear that, if Richards had no title to this ship, his attorney could convey none, so that, in fact, the defence of Messrs. Morice and Towne is this: "We purchased from the attorney of Richards, whose title we then considered doubtful, and now deny. In order to protect ourselves from the doubt of the right of the attorney of Richards to convey, we have taken a title from the original Owner, and we now especially rely upon that title, for we allege that Richards had no title at all." It is a defence founded on two opposite and conflicting titles. Mitchell could have no title to convey except the sale to Richards was void, the attorney of Richards could have no title to convey unless the sale to Richards was valid. This state of things gives rise to an important question—whether is he competent to a party to rely upon two irreconcilable titles, for such unquestionably they are? Both the Bills of Sale purport to convey the whole ship; both cannot be true and valid. I must say that I have very great doubt whether it be competent to a party who has taken a title from the original Owner, and registered his ship accordingly, and who has denied the title of the purchaser, and alleged it to be no title at all, and has put the validity of the title in issue, to turn round and claim under a conveyance from that very purchaser whose title he has denied. Greatly as I doubt the competency of Messrs. Morice and Towne to rely upon two defences repugnant and contradictory, I shall consider them both, and examine how far they can be sustained in law and in fact. The first issue to be tried is the validity of the sale at Shanghae, for if that issue be decided in favour of Messrs. Morice and Towne their possession cannot be disturbed. Richards can have no title. I will examine now what the law requires to render a sale of a ship by a Master abroad valid. It is clear, from the authorities cited in Lord Tenterden's work, that though in early times the validity of a sale by a Master in a foreign port was doubted, yet that now the Master has an implied authority—to use Lord Ellenborough's words—to sell in cases of extreme necessity, and that in cases of extreme necessity, and those only, has he power to sell. It appears further, that whoever purchases under a title of this description must, to defend that title, be prepared to prove the necessity. A decree of a Vice-Admiralty Court ordering the sale will not avail; the authority of a naval officer would not suffice, nor, as I apprehend, any order from any Consular authority. Not that these circumstances would not form a part of the proof of the necessity, but they would not be sufficient proprio vigore. The next question is—what constitutes a necessity? Such a proposition is not capable of exact definition. It is not sufficient to avail myself of Lord Giffard's expression, that the sale was bonâ fide and for the benefit of all concerned, unless it be also shown that there was urgent necessity for the sale being resorted to. All the ingredients which may constitute necessity cannot be enumerated—some may. The want of repairs and the degree of want, the possibility of procuring the repairs at the port where the ship lies, the expense of repairs, the expense of remaining in port, the want of funds and credit, the impracticability of communicating with the Owner—these and other circumstances may, in combination, constitute the necessity the law requires, for that necessity cannot mean absolute compulsion in a physical sense. What is the necessity alleged in this case? First, the want of repair. And what is the proof? The learned Judge that referred to the affidavit of Jameson, and to the evidence of others as to his credibility, and also to some documents in the case, and said: Upon a review of the whole evidence, I am clearly of opinion that the necessity for the sale of this ship has been fully established—that there was no alternative save to leave her upon the beach for eight or nine months at great risk of utter destruction. for that time must have elapsed before orders could have been received from the Owner. To have left her there would have been certain ruin, for if the expense were 50*l.* or even 15*l.* per day, it must have consumed the whole value. It is proved that large repairs were indispensably necessary; that no money could be procured on Bottomry or otherwise; that the best advice was taken, especially that of Lloyd's Agents; that the sale was honestly, justly, and fairly conducted; and I am of opinion that all the requisites of the law were complied with, and that the validity of the sale must be upheld. I have now to address my attention to a very different question—one, indeed, arising out of the circumstances we have been considering; for, with reference to that preceding, Messrs. Morice and Towne urged that Richards had no title at all—that all his proceedings with relation to this ship were fraudulent and of no effect; so it was pleaded, so attempted to be proved, and so argued. The claim now is to be considered founded upon a basis the very reverse of the former. They derive their title from Richards, and therefore must admit that his purchase was lawful, and that he was lawfully possessed of the ship, and has conveyed the ship by his Agent to them. I need not say that the Agent could not convey unless the principal was able legally to authorise him so to do. The sale in question was made under a power of attorney, dated in the month of September, 1855, granted by Richards to Dewar Stiles, whom he had appointed Master of the ship, and who brought her from China to this country. It is a proposition of law which I apprehend every lawyer must admit, that a sale made by an Agent, duly authorised by power of attorney, cannot be impeached by the grantor of that power on the ground of want of authority; but there are, notwithstanding, many circumstances which might invalidate a Sale made by an attorney, though his authority to sell may not be impeachable—for instance, great inadequacy of price, collusion by the Agent with the purchaser, and very many other circumstances which it is not necessary to enumerate. It is my duty to look at the whole facts and evidence in this case, and then to determine whether the sale be valid or not. I will observe, however, that nothing which passed between Richards and Stiles can be urged against the purchaser, provided it was unknown to the purchaser, or which could not have been known by reasonable inquiry. In other words, the proposition is that if Stiles be found to have acted improperly or dishonestly towards his principal, the purchaser could not be affected by such conduct if he, the purchaser, was ignorant of the same, and not called upon by circumstances to make inquiry. The Court then adverted to the pleadings and evidence, in great detail, with reference to the connection of Stiles with the ship anterior and subsequent to the sale, and also with regard to the question of whether Stiles was justified in selling her, and said: I am of opinion that though the power of attorney was not expressly revoked, yet that it was substantially; that the circumstances of the case were not so urgent as to authorise the Master to sell as he did, and that he was not justified in the course he pursued. But however this may be as to Stiles, it is manifest that Morice and Towne could not be affected by Stiles's conduct towards his Owner, save so far as they had actual knowledge of the fact, or knowledge in contemplation of law. It has been argued on behalf of Morice and Towne that Richards is not, and never was, the lawful Owner of this ship; and it has been sworn, in an affidavit brought in on his behalf, that the sale to Richards was illegal and fraudulent. I greatly doubt whether it be competent for Morice and Towne to set up a case against their own pleading, and I have not heard one word in justification of their right so to do. When was it that Messrs. Morice and Towne discovered that the sale to Richards was illegal and fraudulent, and that Richards never was the Owner of this ship? Was it before the purchase? In that case they were buying the ship of the attorney of a man who they knew not only to have no legal title, but to be in possession under a fraudulent sale. It would be difficult to say that such a purchase as that could stand good. But did Morice and Towne make the purchase first, and afterwards discover that Richard's title was founded upon an illegal and fraudulent sale; if so, when and when? Captain Stiles had formerly commanded a ship in which they had an interest, which ship was sold somehow in China. Morice and Towne had insured the Margaret Mitchell by the directions of Stiles, they were, therefore, previously acquainted with Stiles, and were not altogether strangers to the concerns of the ship. What is the account given of the purchase? On the 22d of June Stiles placed the ship in the hands of Messrs. Rayden and Reid for sale. It was advertised for sale by public auction on the 11th of June. Mr. Morice swears that the intention of his partner and himself being drawn to the matter of sale—whether by the notices themselves or through Stiles he does not say—they made inquiries of Rayden and Reid and of Stiles as to the title he (Stiles) could legally convey to a purchaser. What was the result of that inquiry? Mr. Morice does not tell us. Did Stiles give to Morice the history of Richards's title, such as he has now sworn to, or did he induce, by another representation, Mr. Morice to buy? I must in favour of Mr. Morice presume the latter; but, then, what becomes of Captain Stiles's honesty and integrity? What further information did Mr. Morice acquire? He says he ascertained that Mr. Mitchell was the registered Owner; that there was an indorsement of the sale at Shanghae, also of a mortgage for 1,336*l.* to Messrs. Arthur and Co., of Hongkong; that he applied to the Comptroller of Customs, who informed him that no register could be granted without the consent of Mr. Mitchell, and that he gave up the intention to purchase. On the 11th of June the ship was arrested at the instance of Mr. Mitchell, and the sale by auction thereby prevented. Mr. Morice swears that he was waited upon by Stiles, who represented that he had no means to defend the action, and expressed great doubt whether he could successfully contest the right of Mitchell to the possession of ship, which had been, as he said, most unjustifiably sold to Richards. I should like to know what the answer of Mr. Morice was to such representations. Did he not know that, if the ship had been most unjustifiably sold to Richards, that Richards had no right to execute any power of attorney to sell her, and that the proposal by Stiles, as attorney to Richards, with such a conviction, was contrary to every principle of justice? It is then sworn that Stiles requested him to negotiate for the sale to them of Mitchell's interest in the ship; that he accordingly did negotiate with Mitchell, and arranged that Mitchell should transfer the ship to him and his partner for 1,200*l.* By whose authority did Morice and Towne undertake such negotiation, and what, in effect, was the transaction of such negotiation? The 1,200*l.* paid to Mitchell was 1,200*l.* out of the pocket of Richards if he was bonâ fide the Owner; and who did or could authorise Morice and Towne so to deal with the interests of Richards? From Richards himself they had no authority; from Stiles they could have none, for he had simply a power of attorney to sell the ship, and a power of attorney to sell the ship imports that he shall sell the ship for its value as a ship, and gives no authority to negotiate a sale upon any other terms. Of this 1,200*l.*, if Richards had a bonâ fide title, and this sale be could stand good, he would be defrauded by this arrangement; and if Richards had no valid title he would not have any right, in law or in equity, to the other sums said to have been paid on account of this purchase by Morice and Towne to Stiles, and Lea as his Agent. If ever there was a case in which the vigilance of a purchaser ought to have been awakened it was the present. It must have been perfectly evident to Morice and Towne that this was a sale not for the benefit of the Owner, but for the benefit of Stiles, the Master; and it was their bounden duty, as honest purchasers, to make every possible inquiry into the circumstances connected with the sale, and as to the directions given by the Owner of the ship. It was not a common sale by power of attorney; it was a sale by a Master under a power of attorney, invalid by his own representation, and rendered still more suspicious by the claim of Mr. Mitchell. To be safe in a purchase bonâ fide purchase under a power of attorney, where the purchaser afterwards, discovering that he has got a doubtful title, seeks peace by payment to an adverse claimant; but it is the case of a purchaser, being told beforehand that the attorney had no right to sell without authority, bolstering up his title by reference to a third party, at the expense of an individual whose interests were without authority sacrificed. I proceed to the next step. Mr. Morice swears that on June 13 the ship was transferred to him by Stiles free from incumbrances, save as appears by the registry of the ship, whereby Mitchell appeared to be the registered Owner, and subject to a mortgage of 1,336*l.* Now Stiles knew that that money on mortgage had been paid off. Did he or did he not communicate that fact to Morice and Towne? If he did, why was no notice taken of that communication? If he did not, what becomes of his character for honesty? But what is the effect of this Bill of Sale? Why that, there being a reservation of this incumbrance, and the incumbrance not existing, it was so much money deducted from the real price and value of the ship. What is the next step in this case? A Bill of Sale is taken from Mr. Mitchell, in consideration of 1,200*l.*, with a covenant that Mitchell has power to transfer, and that the ship is free from incumbrances. What is the result of this transaction? Is it meant that, if Mr. Mitchell's title could be sustained, the claim for the mortgage would be invalidated; or what is the meaning of this covenant in the Bill of Sale? It is right to observe that these transfers take place by private contract, and not at a public auction. The price which has been paid for this ship on account of Mr. Richards is 4,000*l.* That is the utmost extent to which he could be benefited by this transfer, possibly the 1,336*l.* mortgage was added to the price. Messrs. Morice and Towne might conceive that they had given more, but they knew, or ought to have known, that that mortgage was paid off. Now, was this price the true value of the property transferred, and how is that value to be ascertained? On the part of the purchasers, thus: We bought a doubtful title. Be it so. Who gave Stiles a power to sell the ship upon a doubtful title? and by what authority from Richards did they take a doubtful title? On the part of Richards it is contended that the value of the ship was what it was worth with a good title; and, beyond all doubt, both from the affidavit of Mr. Bailey, the repairs done, and the insurances effected, the real value of the ship was above 4,000*l.* 4,000*l.* Now, what became of the price? About 3,000*l.* was paid to Stiles, who retained it in liquidation of an account consisting of his own demands only, never settled by his Owner, and the remainder paid to Mr. Lea, who, though, he repudiated the agency of the ship, was not unwilling to take, as such Agent, the residue of the purchase money on an equally unsettled account. I have now finished my investigation into this transaction, with an earnest endeavour to ascertain its real nature, and I cannot doubt the conclusions to which I must come. I am of opinion, as I have already expressed, that the sale by Jameson was fully authorised by the circumstances of the case, and that Mr. Mitchell's title was wholly divested thereby; and I am further of opinion that the claim of Messrs. Morice and Towne to rely upon the purchase from Stiles, as the attorney of Richards, cannot be supported. I think the conduct of Stiles was not justifiable, and that the transaction was so conducted that, with reference to the facts already stated—I do not wish to repeat them or to make use of severe and harsh expressions—and upon every principle of law and equity, I pronounce against the sale to Morice and Towne null and void, and I condemn the parties in costs.

Japan: its geographical situation, extent, and divisions; its mountains, rivers, lakes, climate, and natural productions; origin of the Japanese, their early history and national character.

Of beasts, birds, fishes, reptiles, and insects, the Japanese have extensive catalogues, including some which are 'merely chimerical, most existing in nature, nor yet invented by themselves, but borrowed from their neighbors the Chinese'. Those who wish for an account of these 'chimeras' must go to Kæmpfer, where they will find full description illustrated with plates. The doctrine of the transmigration of souls being received almost universally, so says the writer just named, the natives eat no 'flesh-meat;' and living as they do chiefly on vegetables, they know how to improve the ground to much better advantage, than to turn it into meadows and pastures for breeding cattle, and cows to serve for riding, and for carriages and ploughing; buffaloes, oxen, and cows are employed only for the two latter purposes. Of milk and butter the Japanese know nothing. They have no asses, mules, camels, or elephants. Sheep and goats were kept formerly by the Dutch and Portuguese at Firando, and might be bred in the country to great advantage. Of swine they have very few; but of dogs and cats they keep an abundance. Among their wild animals are deer, bears, hares, and foxes.

The principal fowls in Japan are ducks, geese, herons, pheasants, woodcocks, pigeons, cranes, storks, falcons, hawks, ravens, snipes, sparrows, swallows and a few tame fowls. The common European crows and parrots are said not to be found in that country. Of fish, the Japanese have almost every kind that can be mentioned. The first and most mischievous of reptiles, according to Kæmpfer, are the white ants; next are the millipedes, which are more venomous than the scorpion. Snakes are not common in Japan. Of the flying insects there are among others, bees, wasps, gnats, beetles, bugs, butterflies, and a singular kind of night-fly, which by reason of its incomparable beauty is kept by the ladies among their curiosities; it is about a finger long, slender, round-bodied, with four wings. The following fable uses its origin to the unparalleled beauty of this little creature. They say that all other sight-lies fall in love with it, and that to get rid of their importunities, it maliciously bids them (for a trial of their constancy,) to go and fetch fire. The blind lovers scruple not to obey the commands, and flying to the next fire or candle, they never fail to burn themselves to death. The female is not near so beautiful as the male, but grey, ash-colored, and spotted.'

The origin of the Japanese is a subject about which historians have differed exceedingly; the question still remains unsettled. Kæmpfer, Siebold, Golownin, and Klaproth agree in the opinion that the people of Japan did not derive their origin from the Chinese. Siebold thinks that they derived their pedigree from the Tartars inhabiting the north-eastern part of the continent of Asia: Klaproth, Kæmpfer, and Golownin dissent from this opinion. The last named writer thinks their origin is buried in the obscurity of the remotest antiquity; but maintains "that the Japanese and Kuriles once were one and the same nation, and are descended from the same stock." To Kæmpfer, it seems the most probable conjecture, "that they are descended from the first inhabitants of Babylon, and that the Japanese language is one of those, which the all-wise Providence hath thought fit, by way of punishment and confusion, to infuse in the minds of the vain builders of Babel." He gives reasons which induced the Japanese to travel eastward, and marks out the course by which they passed across the continent to the country of the rising sun: he shows at the same time also, that at different periods, Chinese and other people have come in and settled among them. Klaproth is, likewise, of the opinion that if any people have a title to be considered as aborigines, the Japanese have, and that they have been civilized by colonies from China. We will here introduce his views of the subject, and nearly in his own words.

At first sight, the Japanese seem greatly to resemble the Chinese in form and exterior. In carefully examining their characteristic features, however, and comparing them with those of the Chinese, it is easy to perceive a difference between them. The eye of the Japanese, although placed almost as obliquely as that of the Chinese, is wider near the nose, and the centre of the lid appears drawn up when opened. The hair of the Japanese is not uniformly black, as with the Chinese, but of a deep brown hue. In children below the age of twelve, it may be found of all shades, even to flaxen. There are also individuals to be met with who have their hair completely black, and almost crisped, with eyes very oblique, and a skin extremely dark. The complexion of the lower ordnas appears yellowish; that of the inhabitants of the towns is diversified according to their mode of life; while in the palaces of the great may be seen complexions as fair and cheeks as ruddy as those of European females. The vagabonds in the high ways, on the other hand, have a skin of a color between copper and a brown earthy hue. This is the prevailing complexion of the Japanese peasantry, of those parts of the body particularly which are most exposed to the sun.

The distinct origin of the Chinese and Japanese is completely established by the language of the latter, which is wholly different, in respect to radicals, from that of all the nations in the vicinity of Japan. Although it has adopted a considerable number of Chinese words, those words do not form a radically integral part of the language; they have been introduced by Chinese colonies, and principally by Chinese literature, which has formed the basis of that of Japan. The Japanese language has little resemblance to those of the Corean tongue; they are equally alien from the dialects of the Kuriles or Ainos, who inhabit Jeso; neither has the Japanese language any affinity to the dialects of the Manchous and the Tonngouse, who inhabit the continent opposite to Japan.

The Japanese regard Sinmoo, as the founder of their empire. He came, B. C. 660, from the western part of their country, to conquer the island of Niphon. It is extremely probable that he was of Chinese origin, and that his family had fled from China during the disorders which agitated this country under the Chow dynasty, and that he took refuge in a country further to the east. This conjecture seems more probable from the fact, that the Japanese know positively nothing of the occurrences in their own country prior to the epoch of Sinmoo. This conqueror found Niphon already peopled, and only settled in it. Hence it appears that, at that epoch, the whole of the island was occupied by the ancient aborigines, who as civilization spread in the western portion, were gradually impelled towards the east, and for that reason received the denomination of Atsumagebis, or eastern barbarians. These people maintained themselves for a considerable time in the north-west of Niphon, principally in the kokf or department of Mouts. They were not completely dispersed and blended with the other Japanese till the eleventh century of our era. If it be admitted that Sinmoo was of Chinese origin, it is not, therefore, necessary to suppose that he came direct from China to Japan. The Chinese annals inform us that the most eastern countries of Asia were at a period much more remote, peopled by Chinese; for in the year B.C. 1195, the inhabitants of the eastern part of China, oppressed by the tyranny of the emperor Wooyeih, embarked in vast numbers, men, women, and children, and sought the neighboring islands, where they formed colonies. After the time of Sinmoo, other Chinese settlers arrived in Japan, and particularly an expedition consisting of three hundred couples of young people, sent by the emperor Che Hwangte, across the eastern sea, in search of the liquor of immortality! According to the Japanese annals, having sought the thing in vain, the young party, under the direction of Seu-fuh, a skilful Chinese physician, arrived in Japan, B. C. 209, and landed at Kuma in the southern part of Niphon. The leader, after having introduced among the natives, arts and sciences which were unknown there before, died and was deified as Foos, and to this day the Japanese pay him divine honors.

ANTI-SUICIDAL EFFECT OF THE THAMES.—The state of the Thames has had one excellent effect—preventing the commission of attempted suicide. Previously to the hot weather, scarcely a week passed without some wretched castaway attempting, or pretending to attempt, felo de se, by deliberately walking down bridge steps, or flinging him or herself from some accessible point on shore into the river, to be rescued at imminent personal risk by some brave and respectable member of society, having, perhaps, a family dependent upon his life and health, and receiving nothing in return but the applause of the public, a Humane Society's medal, and the silent regrets of the rescued one's friends. Since it has become known that an immersion of a second in the filthy river is equivalent to a dose of arsenic, and that the stomach pump is a more necessary means of restoration than brandy and water restoratives, the cases of this kind have diminished in number.—Morning Herald.
